Camp Description: During the weeklong camp, youth will be asked to step out of their comfort zones in many ways. Some examples might be sleeping outside underneath the stars, go white water rafting, sing songs or perform skits, work as a team, and work on life skills such as communication, decision making and conflict management. They will spend the week away from modern technology, live in tents and take cold showers. Often this camp is confused as a white water rafting camp. However, the most important component to this camp is that it is designed to build and develop leadership skills as youth transition into High School.
